

Paige Gold

Paige Gold is an attorney/MBA with broad knowledge of business and entertainment law. She began her professional life in the nation's capital, working in public affairs before moving to Los Angeles and entering the entertainment industry, ultimately opening her own media and entertainment law practice.

Paige's Washington, D.C. pre-law background encompasses positions in politics, public policy, and an early stint as a feature writer at Washingtonian Magazine. Along the way, she earned an MBA at George Washington University.

In Los Angeles Paige held production-development positions with several independent film companies and with ABC Television before entering Southwestern Law School. After graduating and passing the bar exam, Paige practiced business law in Los Angeles for six years before earning a Master of Law degree (LLM) in media and entertainment law, then expanding her practice to those areas. A member of both the California and DC bars, Paige advises creative professionals (writers, producers, directors and designers), businesses and nonprofit organizations concerning contracts, copyright and trademark law, personnel issues, business negotiations and other matters.

